VA'S ESSENTIAL MINERALS

Virginia has deposits of four of the "strategic" and two of the "critical" and seven of the "essential" mineral resources needed for national defense, Dr. Arthur Bevan, State Geologist, has pointed out to the Manufacturers' Record. The four strategic minerals are ganeese, mica, nickel and tin. Critical raw materials are titanium and graphite, and essential minerals include arsenic, lead, manganium; phosphate pyrites, zinc and zirconium.

LIQUOR PRICES TO RISE

The Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board estimates that the new State tax of ten per cent and a proposed Federal tax increase of 75 cents per proof gallon on liquor will raise the price of the cheapest whisky 38 per cent above current prices.

HOW WE GOT
"WATCH YOUR P's AND Q's"

In type, letters are cast in reverse. The "p" looks like a "q." Unskilled early printers often got the two letters mixed. This was the origin of the admonition "Watch your P's and Q's."

Mark of the PRESS Better Paper

Today most any printer knows his P's and Q's. But all printers don't now how to produce good, up-to-date printing. Only alert craftsmen working with smart, new type faces can produce "current-model" printing.

Soap Wrappers

By LUCIE A. O'BRIEN
(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

JENNIE slumped in the rickety kitchen rocker, her work-roughened hands nervelessly clasping a sodden handkerchief. Her tear-swollen eyes no longer reflected desperate courage. They were dull with hopelessness.

For three hours the village chief, his assistant and Mrs. Haard, the mistress of Birch Clump, had tried by every means to make the girl admit taking Mrs. Jerome's expensive compact. The vanity case was on the dresser. Jennie had tidied up. The case was gone.

"That's the thanks I get. I took you from an institution and for two years I treated you grand. You repay me by stealing from a guest. My tourist trade will be ruined."

At first Jennie replied mildly: "Why, no, I didn't take Mrs. Jerome's compact." I'll be sent to jail, thought Jennie. What of it? Jail's no worse than the institution, or here.

Suddenly remembrance stabbed Jennie. Her secret! She sobbed: "Don't send me away."

She just couldn't leave Mrs. Haard's. Mrs. Haard was kind. And it was no cinch being the only maid in a tourist home.

The past summer Jennie had stopped wondering for life had smiled upon her. She was in love with a bronzed god who drove a truck.

Their first meeting occurred the day before the Fourth. HE was buying gasoline at the general store adjoining Birch Clump. Jennie was atop the stone wall, snipping lumbler roses. Her foot slipped . . .

HE reached the wall in one bound and caught her in his strong arms. "Watch your step, kid. Scissors jab you? Yep. Here." HE produced an unfolded, green-bordered handkerchief and bound up the bleeding scratch.

"Th-thanks," gasped Jennie.

A week lagged. Then Jennie saw the truck lumbering up the hill. She waved frantically, jumped from the wall—and sprawled flat on her face.

Brakes grated. Jennie was lifted up, oh, so gently! HE inquired laughingly: "You practicing tumbling acts?"

Jennie, oblivious to scraped palms and scratched nose, held out a carefully laundered handkerchief.

HE grinned. "Too bad nice ladee washee hankie." HE told Jennie to moisten the handkerchief and then he applied the dampened corner to her bruises. Wild joy possessed Jennie. She seized the handkerchief, stammered: "Next time you go by—" and fled.

Two weeks dragged by. No more roses. Jennie's heart sickened, then sang, for one glorious morning up the hill flashed the fairy coach. That night, Jennie daringly sneaked out to her first date with Curly.

The memory of succeeding rapturous evenings kept Jennie singing at her tasks. Now Jennie sat crumpled in a broken rocker. Life mocked her.

Just a few days before, four touring stenographers had summoned Jennie to aid in their departure. She was fascinated by their lovely clothes and their complexions.

"Sit here, Jennie," ordered one, indicating the vanity dresser bench.

The speaker removed pads from an open, pink-enameled case. Substituting cotton, she dusted Jennie's heart-shaped face with scented powder; smoothed dabs of orange paste into a rosy flush; outlined a Cupid's bow mouth.

"Th-thanks," stammered Jennie. How could she keep beautiful—for him—without a compact? Wait. Where had she seen one? A shining black case rimmed with sparkling stones, flaunting a brilliant J.

Jennie remembered . . .

Questions and accusations: accusations and questions. The merciless grilling was interrupted by a thumping knock and Curly burst in saying: "Jennie, here's your doodad. You forgot—" He held out a black disk edged with stones, a rampant J holding the center.

"I'll take that. You stay as is," the chief ordered, flashing his badge.

Mrs. Jerome twittered from the threshold: "Found my compact. So careless. So sorry, Jennie." She placed a soiled white bag on Jennie's icy knees. "To pay for your inconvenience." She fluttered out, immensely pleased with her generosity.

"Where did you get this case?" Mrs. Haard demanded suspiciously.

"With soap wrappers," whispered Jennie. "I'd been saving them since I came, to get a warm sweater."

"You took my soap wrappers—" began Mrs. Haard.

"I took them from the waste basket, after you threw them away," sighed Jennie.

"My property—" continued Mrs. Haard.

"You skinflint," blazed Curly. "Jail's too good for you. You worked this kid to death and half starved her. What about her back wages, if ever any?"

Mrs. Haard's eyes dilated. Her mouth twitched.

"Don't worry, Jen's leaving. Keep quiet. She's of age. Just try to make trouble, here—" He grabbed the cheap tin case from the chief's hand—"make yourself over. Come, Jen, the town clerk's got a job to do on us."

Aiding Farm Migrants

"While federal agencies have been acting to help the migrants already on the road, their main efforts," Secretary Wallace recently explained to the senate civil liberties committee, "have been devoted to checking migration at its source. For every dollar which the Farm Security administration has used to aid migrants in California, for example, it has used $20 for the rehabilitation of needy farm families in the five states from which most of the Pacific coast migrants originally came—Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Arkansas, and Missouri. Throughout the nation, it has used nearly $480,000,000 in the last five years to help low-income farm families get a new foothold in their home communities."

A Long Range Prediction

By JOHN ADAMS

On July 2, 1776, the delegates from the 13 colonies, meeting in Philadelphia, voted to separate from British rule. On that day, two days before the Declaration of Independence was signed, John Adams, later to become second President of the United States, wrote to his wife, Abigail:

"I am apt to believe that it (the day) will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, and illuminations from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward evermore.

"You will think me transported with enthusiasm but I am not. I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure that it will cost to defend these States. Yet through all the gloom I can see the rays of ravishing light and glory. I can see that the end is more than worth all the means; and that posterity will triumph in that day's transaction, even though we should rue it, which I trust in God we shall not."

Adams predicted pretty well the nature of the celebration, although Abigail Adams, who had the unique distinction of being the wife of one President and the mother of another. John Adams, second President, was her husband. John Quincy Adams, sixth President, was her son.

he did think we would be celebrating the second of July instead of the Fourth.

SHEEP RAISING YIELDS PROFITS

Breeding, Management and Feeding Vital Factors.

By L. I. CASE

Growers who make the most money from their sheep and who receive top prices for their lambs and wool aren't turning this trick by accident.

They have learned something about the many factors which contribute to growing a product in ready demand by the market. Chief among these factors are good breeding, feeding, and management practices.

In breeding, the successful sheepman is careful to select short-legged, compact, blocky rams rather than the long-legged, coarse, upstanding type. Then he ships to market each year his wether lambs and part of his ewe lambs but holds back the best ewe lambs for replacing old and poor-producing members of the flock.

Good feeding, placed by many sheepmen ahead of good breeding, is likewise highly important in the production of high-grade market animals. Plenty of milk is probably the most important feed item in producing top-notch lambs. This means the ewes must be fed for milk production.

Many growers feed their lambs some grain in addition to the milk. This is often placed in a creep where the lambs may help themselves without being disturbed by the older sheep.

In addition to good feeding and good breeding, there are a large number of approved management practices that the most successful sheepmen follow. One of the most important is a regular monthly drenching for the control of internal parasites.

Candling Tests Quality

More poultrymen — particularly those who sell direct to housewives or local retailers—should candle their eggs before selling them.

Sometimes an absolutely fresh, new-laid egg will be unsuitable for food, and if delivered the reputation of the producer, because of a bloody white, a blood spot, or meat spot. On the average farm, candling will take only a few minutes daily. A length of stove pipe and a light make a good candle.
